ALICE THROUGH THE LOOKING

by ADAM DONEN

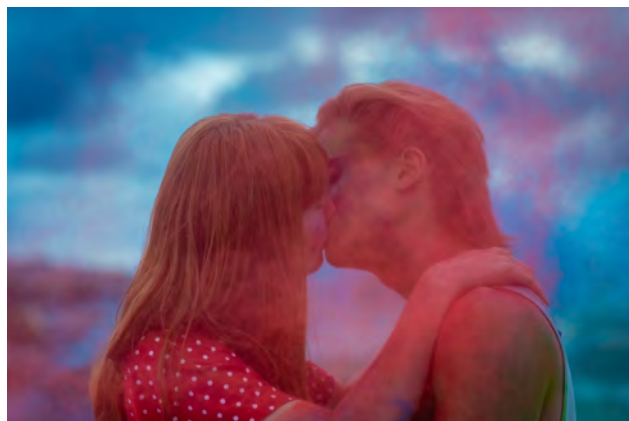

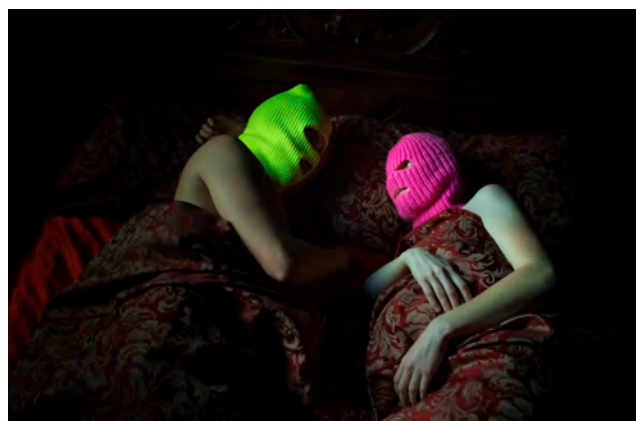

starring

French philosophy student Alice falls in love with a boy, "Rabbit," at a masked ball in London, and takes him home. The next morning, Rabbit has disappeared, along with any indication that their night together ever occurred. Determined to find him, Alice sets out through a Brexit London that has turned very strange indeed, aided by the psychologist-cum-detective Dr. Cat Pillar as reality, nightmare and cinema blur into each other.

MOONBATHING IN FEBRUARY

MOONBATHING IN FEBRUARY is described by Lias Saoudi of unapologetically anarchic South Londoners Fat White Family as “a no-budget DIY film about the “throwing shit at the wall until something sticks” stage of the album-making process. He adds that it “also serves as a portrait of just how hard it is to get your rocks off at the bitter end of a winter lockdown and what, if anything, it means to be in a band at this abysmal juncture in music history”.
